“ Lenny Campanella posted a condolence My name is Lenny Campanella and I am Phil's youngest brother. Growing up with a brother 9 yrs your senior wasn't always easy. Verbal put-downs were common place but Phil was more of a physical person. So, proofing he could do the “clean and jerk” when I was four, he lifted me high over his head and body slammed me onto the living room sofa. The take away (along with a sore back) was that my brother was strong and that he would always be able to protect me. Later in life, he would channel this same physicality into his work to support his family. He worked long hard days and nights foregoing weekends, holidays and vacations. Doing jobs in the wee hours of the morning and returning home late at night was often the norm. Many men would buckle under this labor but he was that devoted to his family. Even rheumatoid arthritis in his knees was just a minor inconvenience. It never slowed him down. And, if you needed a helping hand with any task, he'd be first to volunteer. When his beloved wife, Jackie, became ill he took on many of her daily chores as well. So, besides working, he managed the household doing the grocery shopping, laundry, cooking and cleaning. Some would argue that there wasn't a good balance of family time vs work time. However, he really felt that hard work was the glue that held the family together. He definitely lived the motto that action spoke louder than words. And, I know that his strong work ethic has been passed on to his upstanding children, Debbie, Terry, Kevin and Phil Jr.

Rest in Peace, big brother.
